Her daughters were gay, fashionable girls, and under their suspices I soon found myself introduced into society, and being a good dancer and withal not illlooking I received invitations to most of the balls and parties of an unusually gay season.

It was at one of the most brilliant and crowded of these assemblages that I first met Aura Lee. She was a Southerner, and had come North on a visit to her relatives and had become at once and decidedly a reigning belie. Singularly graceful, with eyes and hair just dark account occurred with a counterion. TESTIMONIAL.

CHICAGO, JURG 26, 1889.—Turkish Talet Co.,

relatives and had become a once and excidedly a reigning belle. Singularly graceful, with eyes and hair just dark enough to contrast with a complexion pale and pure as a lilly, the peculiar nature of her charms served but to enhance their effect. I soon found myself madly and hopelessly in love with her. Hopelessly, indeed, for what chance had I, without wealth or position, of winning one so universally admired? Yet the very despairing nature of my passion, but rendered it more intense; and to crown my misery I became insanely jealous of every one that dared claim her attention for a moment.

Matters were in this state when I received an invitation to a large party at the house of one of Miss Lee's most intimate friends. I had for some time been troubled with a transient pain in the region of the heart, for which some simple medicine had been perscribed, to be taken at the moment of the attack. The night of the ball arrived, and I was in the act of drawing on my gloves when the pain seized me. Hastily snatching the bottle and spoon from the closet where they were deposited, I swallowed the prescribed dose and started out, somewhat relieved.

It was one of the coldest nights of an unusually severe winter. The atmosphere felt like aerified ice, and as the chilling blast swept past me, I congratulated myself on the fact that the house where I was going was not far distant. As I reached the door Miss Lee was just alighting from her carriage, but when I descended from the dressing room, I sought for her among the dancers in vain. At last, in a small room adjoining the conservatory, and as yet unvisitable the door manually severed here.

sought for her among the dancers in vain. At last, in a small room adjointing the conservatory, and as yet unvisited by the gay throng, I discovered her in apparently carnest conversation with one of the most assiduous of her admirers, a Mr. Chester, of Virginia.

The demon of jeelousy seized upon my heart at once, and seating myself on asofa in one of the recesses I determined to interrupt by my presence at least, the further continuance of their seemingly interesting conversations.

Never had I seen her look more beautiful. She stood within the recess of a large bay window, her elender form in its snowy robes relieved by the glowing scarlet of the satin curtains, and her ethereal beauty contrasting well with the dark and manly form of the handsomo Virginian. Her dress was some white, misty material, that floated around her like a cloud. One single white lily drooped its snowy cup against the coils of her shining hair and formed the only ornament of her simple and most becoming costume.

As I gazed ather I thought I discerned is the bane of so many lives that here is where we make our great boast. Our pills cure is while others do not.

If she was annoyed at having her tetea-tete thus interrupted she manifested no vexation, and in a moment we found ourselves in the ball room. She danced ourselves in the ball room. She danced with even more than her usual grace and spirit, but the jealous fury that possessed me rendered me utterly incapable of entering into the spirit of the dance. Gradually my irritated feelings resolved themselves into a mad resolution to learn my late at once, and as the music ceased I drew my partner into the little reception room we had so recently quitted, and which was untenanted. The door of the conservatory stood invitingly garden for the conservator stood inviting garden for the conservator stood inviting garden of the conservatory stood invitingly open, and I advanced toward it, "Is there not too much of a draught there?" said Miss Lee, shrinking back. "I have reason to fear every breath of cold air."

"Why so?" I asked.

"Why so?" I asked,
"The physicians have pronounced my lungs to be extremely delicate, and a sudden rush of cold air, inhaled while I am heated with dancing, may prove fait to gine. But look! what a beautiful

We entered the conservatory, and I closed the door behind us. We were alone; the faintly audible sounds of the orchestra in the ball room alone broke the stillness. Yet I could not speak; the stillness. Yet I could not speak; in silence I walked beside her as she surveyed the rare plants that surrounded us, or bent to inhale their fragrance At last as she turned toward me and said TRADE MARIE surveyed the rare plants that surrounded us, or bent to inhale their fragrance. At last as she turned toward me and said: "Let us return to the ball room, Mr. Graves; I am engaged to Mr. Chester for the next dance."

The words maddened me; I seized the handle of the door, and in a tone of passionate vehemence cried:

"You shall not leave this place until you have heard me, Miss Lee! I have long sought an opportunity of telling you how wildly I love you."

She surveyed me calmly and coldly.

"You are too violent, Mr. Graves," she said at last. "Let me pass, sir."

"You will not hear me? Then you love another!" I cried despairingly.

"Open that door and let me pass," was her only auswer.

"Do you love Mr. Chester?"

"You've no right to ask me such a question, and I refuse to answer," was her reply, as she turned away from me with flushed cheeks and flashing eyes.

I must indeed have been mad to act as I did then. I caught her by the waist, and drawing her to the side of the conservatory, with one blow I shivered to atoms several of its panes. The breath of that fearful winter night poured in upon ber shrinking form in her gossaner robes, and, strong man though I was, I gasped for breath as the ley blast swept past me.

"You have said that the winter wind was fatal to you." I shricked savagely.

"Will you not answer now?"

She did not struggle to release herself from my frenzied grasp, but, drawing herself up to her full height, turned on me her beautiful eyes, blasing with indignation and disdain. For one instant she stood thus; the next, a short, sharp, spasm shook her frame, and she fell forward, a stream of blood pouring from her lips and deluging her white dress with its fearful crimson. Wild with terror and remorse I caught her in my arms.

"Aura! Aura!" I shrieked.

But there was no answer. Slowly and fancy like the moan of a departed spirit.

Laying my fair burden on the sofa, I bent anxiously over her. I laid my hand on her heart. All was still.

"I have murdered her!" I cried, springing up. "Help! Help!"

"Will the gentlemen please to let me put out the lights?" said a voice at my eibow.

I started up and found myself on the sofa in the little reception room. Miss that there was no need for him to charge the had disappeared, the cold gray dawn them, or for them to quit the box. They,

"Where is Miss Lee?" I asked.
"Grone long ago, sir. 'Spect you have been asleep."

Thank heaven, it was all a dream!
When I reached home I went to the closet where I kept the medicine I was in the habit of taking. The bottle was undisturbed, and beside the spoon was another phial, the one from which I had in mistake poured the dose the night before. I took it up and read upon the label, "Solution of Morphia."

And Aura? Well, she has been my wife for many happy years.

A Twenty Years' Experience.

D. D. Fredericks, the well-known photographer, 770 Broadway, N. Y., says:
I have been using Allooks's Porous Plasters for 20 years, and found them one of the best of family medicines. Briefly summing up my experience, I tay that when placed on the small of the back Allook's Plasters fill the body with nervous energy, and thus cure fattuge, brain exhaustion, debility and kidney difficulties. For women and children I have found them invaluable. They never irritate the skin or cause the slightest pain, but cure sore throat, coughs, colds, pains in side, back or chest, indigestion and bowel complaints.
